play five-set thrillers, you know. I'm happy it happened today. I left as the winner. Perfect."

He's taken 11 of the past 17 Grand Slam titles, including three apiece at the Australian Open and U.S. Open. Now Federer's total trails only Roy Emerson's 12 and Pete Sampras' 14 on the list of career Grand Slam titles.

"I don't know how much longer I can keep it up," the 25-year-old Federer said, "but I definitely feel like I'm mentally and physically still fit to go on for many more years."

As close as the 21-year-old Nadal is to a barrier — the Spaniard does lead their career series 8-5, after all — Federer's main challenge for some time has come from trying to live up to standards set in the past.

Even if Federer doesn't necessarily look at it that way.

"He has so much passion for the game," said his mother, Lynette. "He's not playing for the record books. He's playing for the game."

On Sunday, on his game's grandest stage, Federer finished with a 24-1 edge in aces and a 65-50 edge in winners. Numbers hardly do justice to his excellence or elegance with a racket in hand, however.

"He's an artist on this surface. He can stay back. He can come in. No weaknesses," said Borg, whose Wimbledon run was from 1976-80. "I believe if he continues the way he's doing and stays away from injuries and has the motivation, he'll be the greatest player ever to play the game."

And those words were spoken before Borg watched Federer's latest virtuoso performance from the front row in the Royal Box in jacket and tie.

Federer also dressed formally for the occasion, sporting his tailor-made, five-piece Gatsby getup, from the white dinner jacket with the gold "RF" on the left breast pocket to the white slacks replete with belt loops. Even his shoes were special, with four tiny red circles patterned after the Swiss flag, each marking a year he won a Wimbledon title. A fifth circle needs to be added now.

Still, just when it looked as if Federer might turn the sunny afternoon into a coronation by taking a 3-0 lead, Nadal won the next three games. Just when it looked as if Nadal might be in charge, breezing through the fourth set, Federer broke twice in a row to end the match.

Each did what he does best — and managed to show a flair for his foe's fortes.

Nadal is terrific at the base-

On the Proposed Cleanup Plan for Chemical Recovery Systems, Inc. Superfund Site
Elyria, Ohio

U.S. Environmental Protection Agency recently completed a remedial investigation, feasibility study and proposed plan that evaluated seven alternatives for cleaning up, or managing, contaminated soil and ground water at the Chemical Recovery Systems, Inc. Superfund site.

EPA looked at seven ways to address the contamination. The Agency is recommending a 2-foot thick soil cover over the site to eliminate direct contact by people or wildlife. Also, an area in the northwest portion of the site would be excavated to remove the most highly contaminated soil.

This cleanup plan, referred to as Alternative 6, will protect human health and the environment, provide long-term effectiveness, comply with state and federal environmental regulations, can easily be implemented and is cost effective.

Comments on all of the alternatives may be submitted in writing between July 16 and Aug. 14, 2007:

Written and oral comments will be accepted at a PUBLIC MEETING at 6 p.m., Thursday, July 26, 2007, at Elyria City Hall, Council Chambers, 2nd Floor, 131 Court St.

Copies of the reports, proposed plan, and other site-related documents are available for review at: Elyria Public Library, 320 Washington Ave. and online at <http://www.epa.gov/region5/sites/crs>.

An administrative record file, which contains the information that will be used in the selection of the final cleanup plan, has also been placed at the library.
